03.19.08 The returns are in and, for the record, I voted for John McCain. I didn't vote for any other candidate. I am sure, though, that some of you are interested in the end results. For the record, I also voted for Ronald Reagan, George Bush I and II, Bill Clinton, Bob Dole, Bob Barr, Bush the Uniter, Bob Smith and even Ralph Nader. I voted that way primarily because I am a Libertarian. Now, I am not a conspiracy theorist and I do not believe that the U.S. government is a part of the "New World Order." I like facts, plain and simple. John McCain's advisers made a decision to obtain the bogus information that caused them to add 10 or 15 points to McCain's "victory". If they had reported the results as they found them on election day, McCain would have lost. I have speculated before about the use of the media to promote a particular candidate. I have written about this before, most recently in Thursday's ConBlog post, to wit, "The Media Is Your Friend": Do you know what the best defense of the freedom of the press is? It's the fact that you, as a free person, are free to criticize the media and call them on their lies. As the Media fails, because their power is waning, you and I need to become stronger. You need to be able to trust your own eyes and ears. And you should be able to educate yourself at your own expense, and be independent of the MSM. Given my lack of a formal education and my general ignorance, you can understand how I might not have a great understanding of the intricacies of the Federal Election Commission (FEC). Whatever your opinion of them, the FEC has, as they say, a leg to stand on. Someone wants John McCain to lose. Is there an anti-Christian bias at work? I don't know. I am not accusing anyone of any kind of wrongdoing here. Yet, the evidence is overwhelming. I want to post some facts that I have researched for myself. I do not have an agenda. I am trying to educate myself about this issue and to inform you about the steps that I am taking to protect myself. The head of the Democratic National Committee is Debbie Wasserman Schultz. I mentioned

What's New in the Photoshop CC?

Defense Minister Günter Grass said on Wednesday that the United States would likely have to destroy a nerve agent on a Syrian air base under the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons resolution. A team of Russian experts went to the Hmeimin air base in the province of Latakia on Tuesday to examine the site, Grass said. US President Donald Trump said on Monday that the deadly nerve agent used in an attack in Syria on Saturday could be loaded in a drone and dropped from the sky in an attack on Syria, before reports of military action began circulating. Read more: Syria: From chemical weapons to 'humanitarian corridors' While the report was still being processed by the organization, Grass said the Syrian government had denied it was there. "There may be evidence of the use of chemical weapons, but at the moment we don't have proof of that," he said. "We must act immediately," Grass said. "Then we have to know what evidence we have for a chemical attack in Syria," he said. The OPCW should take possession of the samples, Grass added. "If the OPCW finds that there was a chemical attack, I am sure that the Americans would say to them, 'You do not have the authority to come in.' "That's true," said Grass. "The OPCW has a mandate for chemical weapons, but it does not have the authority to make an attack." But US Ambassador Nikki Haley did not agree. "I think it's pretty odd that the Russians that are watching that out and know that we've been actively sharing this information with them for months are there. And it's a little bit strange that they haven't had a chance to go out and get the samples," she said. "So as time goes on, and people realize how serious this is, that might change," she added. Russia has suggested that White House National Security Adviser John Bolton could pose the threat of an attack on Syria. "We cannot rule out the need to take such a step," said Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov. The chemical attack on Syrian civilians on Saturday killed more than 80 people and left hundreds injured, according to the Syrian Center for Policy Research and Documentation. Russian media reported on Wednesday that Russia had begun working on a draft resolution for the UN Security Council to send mixed signals to Washington. The resolution would be adopted by Friday and under consideration at the council on Saturday, Russian news agencies
